Hamjambo baba!

The evenings have been really cool this week it has been great; I slept with a cover the last two nights! First time I didn't sweat in my sleep!

It has been a busy week there is a medical team here from that Seacoast church in Charleston, and when there is free medical treatment word gets out pretty quick. It's fun to have some other mazoongoos around though, they bring a fresh perspective and it's nice to hear such positive feedback about what it is that CGA is doing.

We have a break in between terms for a few weeks and I am looking into something fun to do. I need to leave the country at some point for visa reasons. I was thinking Zanzibar or South Africa...someplace where I can have a bit of adventure and some relaxation.

School is going great, my students have really been improving and I have really enjoyed all the individual work I have been doing....who knows maybe that is what I will do when I return. That has been one of my biggest prayers...what the heck do I do after this?! I don't know what my calling is... how can I best serve God and bring glory to His kingdom? So, if you wouldn't mind praying for some clarity in some sort of direction for after here and that I am obedient to the call. I have this crazy peace about life but it sure would be nice to know where I am headed...I just want to know what my gift is to make my difference in the world.

In the short amount of time I have been here God has revealed so much to me and it is refreshing to know that I am in such good hands...and it is a blessing that I am in this place and season in my life that I can devote so much time to be with Him, to pray, to listen, to really get into the Word and apply it, and to learn and grow. Every once in awhile I have these little epiphanies about my life and where I have come and why I did the things I did...goodness me God has done some serious refining in my heart!. It is just a great feeling to know what a treasure I am to such a mighty God.

I have been running and training with some of the athletes at school, girls in 8th grade. I don't think I have sprinted like this since high school! It's been a lot of fun to work with them. I spend so much time with the younger girls it's nice to create relationships with the older girls. Their attitudes and work ethic are improving each day, they just get tired and quit. The mental determination just isn't there... so we are working on that.

Oh, today Roggers brought me a frog. Yep, so I have had baby birds and now a frog! Never a dull moment in Teacher Megan's class:)

ninakuependa sana!
